This late-nineteenth-century I house is located at the corner of C Street and Solomons Island Road. It faces west. It is a three-bay structure with a centered front-facing gable set into the gable roof. Brick chimneys are built along the interior partition walls. There are two bays in each gable end. The windows are glazed with two-over-two double-hung sash. The facade is sheltered by a hipped-roof screened-in porch. There is an original two-story one-bay rear ell. Two small early twentieth-century framed and weatherboarded buildings located in the back yard were used as Solomons' telephone equipment office for twenty-five years.

A gothic iron fence at the perimeter of the property was manufactured by the Stewart Ironworks of Covington, Kentucky.
